Arts Umbrella is a non-profit arts education centre that provides high-quality programming in Dance, Theatre, and Visual Arts. Since 1979, we’ve opened our doors to students ages 2–22, from pre-schoolers to pre-professionals. Every year, more than 20,000 students grow their creativity at Arts Umbrella—with close to 80% participating at subsidized rates.

- Surrey
- Vancouver

At the pre-professional level, Arts Umbrella offers serious actors and dancers programming to help bridge the transition to post-secondary or professional careers in dance, theatre, and film. The Actor’s Conservatory is Canada’s only full-time, intensive prep program for young actors. The two-year Dance Diploma program allows young dancers to elevate their artistry before joining professional companies all over the world.

How we've worked since 1987
 1) Always answer your emergencies
 We're here when you need us most with 24/7, same-day service availability.

- Surrey

2) Always show you who arrives
 With us, you'll never let a stranger into your home. Why? Because 30 minutes before your service, you'll get an email with a picture and bio of your tech or plumber.

ECF Exhibitor Information Sheet

3) Always show you the price upfront
No hidden costs. No sticker shock. You'll always see options and prices for each before any work begins.

4) Always answer your questions
No question is too big—or small— for our pros to answer during your service. Ask away!

5) Always double-check our work.
Twenty-four hours after your service, we'll call you to make sure you're 100% satisfied.

A British Columbia Land Surveyor is an individual commissioned as a land surveyor by the Association of British Columbia Land Surveyors, and is authorized to carry out cadastral surveys within British Columbia. Many British Columbia Provincial statutes specifically designate BC Land Surveyors as the only persons entitled to conduct surveys of land. BC Land Surveyors enter the profession after undergoing a rigorous pre-professional education as Land Surveyors in Training. Many BC Land Surveyors have obtained university degrees in geomatics and survey sciences prior to pursuing their careers as land surveyors, while many others have acquired technical diplomas in survey technologies. As a result, the British Columbia Land Surveyor is well-grounded in both the art and science of land surveying and the application of this knowledge in service to their clients.

The trade of the boilermaker has progressed considerably in many areas. Recent years have seen an increase in new plant construction in the offshore, aluminum, plastics, processing and natural gas industries. The increased size and complexity of the plants being constructed in somewhat remote areas contributes to an increasingly competitive contractor environment and to a very mobile trade. For many workers the economic benefits and the availability of work outweigh other considerations and they select the working and living conditions associated with large construction projects in isolated locations. Advancing technology and new materials such as more modular construction, higher quality welds and welding material, and larger lifts and lifting capacity have contributed to many changes in the field. Current trends are resulting in the introduction of automated equipment, new techniques and processes and a need for an increased proportion of work time spent in the welding function. Of importance, too, is the fact that more women are becoming tradespersons in this area.

VCC is proud to inspire a new generation of students to discover their passions, gain essential skills, and learn what it takes to succeed in a competitive workforce. With over 15,000 students, including a growing number of Aboriginal and International learners, 1,100 employees and an annual budget of $105 million, VCC is a key player in the post-secondary landscape in B.C. Our connections to industry ensure that our students have direct access to employers while our model of access and our partnerships across the post-secondary sector assist students to reach their goals at any stage of their educational journey.

The keys to the VFS educational model are structured intensity and immersion in the industry. Vancouver Film School was founded on the philosophy that one year of concentrated work, that balances industry-led theory and hands-on production, gives students the necessary skills to craft a professional-level portfolio or reel.
